Reflections on the Astronomy of Glasgow:

A story of some 500 years

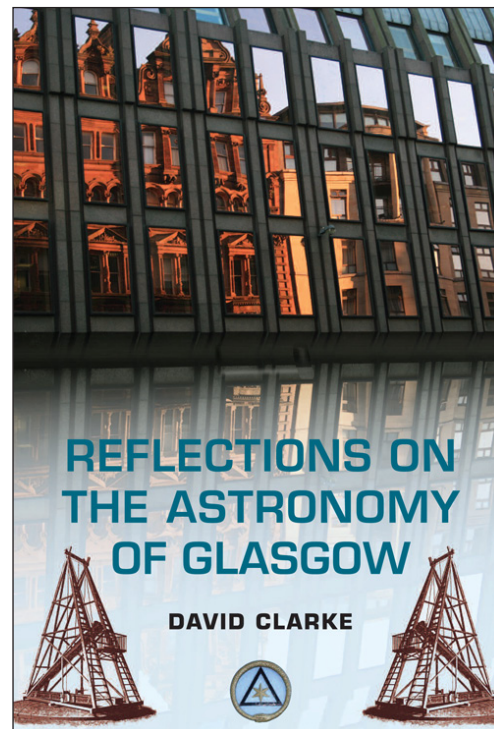

David Clarke

How Astronomy contributed to the educational enlightenment of Glasgow, to its society and to its commerce

This engrossing and entertaining scientific history includes the story of Glasgow's 'Big Bang' of 1863, the controversy over 'Astronomer Royal for Scotland' and a historical survey of the eight observatories that once populated Glasgow.

Key Features

- A comprehensive narrative of 500+ years of Glasgow's connections with Astronomy, the story being unique and non-comparable with any other city around the world
- Contributions made to Astronomy directly by Glasgow University, and new ideas developed there and picked up by others outside its walls are related
- Provides short biographies of colourful contributors to the Astronomical scene in Glasgow
- Presents the history, architecture and structures of eight Glasgow observatories
- Gives insight on social aspects of Astronomy within Glasgow, its relationships with commerce, and the upsurge of interests in Astronomy by the general public
